

Common Uses for the Muscadine Grape

Muscadine Grapes were growing abundantly on Roanoke Island off the North Carolina Coast (near the town of Manteo) when Sir Walter Raleigh came ashore over four hundred years ago.

The lighter varieties (green, gold and rusty colored) have been called “Scuppernongs” and the darker varieties (red and purple colored to almost black) have been called “Fox Grapes” and “Possum Grapes” by Native Americans.

For Hundreds of Years, native to the Southeastern United States, Muscadines were used to help everything from Allergies to Wrinkles

NOW Public and Private Funded Research (mostly since 2003) at many Hospitals and Universities and even the National Institute of Health with hundreds of studies CONFIRM the multitude of benefits of consuming Muscadine daily.

Research now shows the Muscadines have 20 pairs of Chromosomes (while all other vinefera or cluster grapes have only 19 pairs) Muscadines have over 44 times as much Resveratrol (anti-aging) as wine grapes. Muscadines have the highest ORAC rating in lab tests. Muscadines increase artery size which helps with heart disease, cholesterol, and circulation. Muscadines reduce blood sugar levels, helping to reverse Diabetes.

In-vitro studies show Muscadines inhibit the growth of many types of Cancer, including the dreaded Triple Negative Breast Cancer (that kills thousands each year)

Muscadines also reduce inflammation which is the cause of most all health problems and pain, without the damaging side effects of most anti-inflammatory drugs.

Muscadines are only ripe in September, but through special processing, drying, and encapsulating, AmazinGrape makes the Seed and Skin Supplement available for you to enjoy the benefits all year long.
